What is the Foundation and what does it do?

The Karin Dresbach Foundation puts into practice the last will of its founder: The proceeds from a stock of capital are offered for financial support of development projects in "Third World" countries. The Foundation is registered as a charity and its staff work on a purely voluntary basis.

What kind of projects are eligible for support?

The Foundation will respond to applications made to it by individuals or groups wishing to finance particular projects. Applications are considered and decided upon in the regular meetings of the board of directors. The present volume of support is limited (approx. 4000 Euro/ $US 3500 p.a.) but is expected to expand in the future as capital stock is enhanced by donations.

Appropriate "targets" would be individual projects definable in time and locality, areas of health, child/youth/women's support, vocational training or small scale business and/or agricultural support. The processing will be as unbureaucratic and direct as possible, though it will include evaluation, which will have to be tailored on an individual basis.

Why are we telling you about this?

For the Foundation to serve its purpose, people must apply to it for help. We believe that in your daily work you may know or learn about projects that do not fit into other possible frameworks of support. Please alert them to the Foundation and forward one of the enclosed application forms if you wish. We would be glad to learn about suitable projects in this way.

Thank you for your time.
